PREFACE

The Legislature of 1915 early found the meaning of "Efficiency"; and, having found it, proceeded to put it into practice. As a result, it established a new record for cleaning up the matters before it. The pace at which it went through the matters assigned it, both in committee hearings and in disposing of them after being reported upon, has never been surpassed. By the first of May it had so nearly disposed of its business that but little remained except certain railroad and similar important measures, such as always require unusual consideration; and in spite of all this, in spite of unusual delay on the railroad matters, including special messages from the Governor, prorogation was reached on June 4, the earliest date since 1905. In contrast with the House of 1914, which lacked a majority in any one party, that of 1915 was strongly Republican in both branches; and legislation always proceeds more swiftly with a good working majority on one side or another politically. President Coolidge and Speaker Cox are entitled to much of the credit for the short session as they kept skilful guiding hands on all matters; work was well done even though done with neatness and despatch. Less new legislation was passed than usual, as it was deemed wise to let some of the most recent have a fair trial before shaking it up. With no opposition worth mentioning the amendment to the Constitution in favor of woman suffrage was passed along to the people, with the idea that it was time to give the voters a chance to pass upon the question directly. There was no test of the sentiment of the Legislature on the merits of the question. Several important matters were referred to recess commissions or sent to the next Legislature, the time for action not being considered ripe.

"What's in a name?" This was the first House on record with "Sin-nott" in it. The committee on agriculture contained as members a "Lamb" and a "Wolfe", with only a "Read" between them.
